Database administrator

National average salary: $94,537 per year

Primary duties: Database administrators manage large amounts of digital data for clients. They make sure that computer systems operate efficiently, identify user needs to build and administer databases and back up and restore data to prevent losses. Database administrators are in demand because the number of companies using internal networks and databases in the modern business world is growing consistently.